

What you do for the next few days matters.

Being a creative citizen means to be engaged and stand up for what you believe.

“If governments do not take action to control greenhouse gases and deforestation, a vicious cycle will ensue where fires may lead to more fires. As landscapes burn and release carbon dioxide, it helps trap more heat in the atmosphere.”

We did this.

We can change it, vote.

“We have caused this state of our environment and climate, but we still have time to change it. We can put in policies that will protect and sustain the world; we still have time if we act now.”

Think about what issues are important and vote for the change you want to see.

“Green Nation is an installation of sustainable materials on a burnt hill located by Highway 80 in Vacaville to encourage those who are conscious about the wildfires and natural environment to take action and register to vote for the environment.”

Look up the candidates and see how their policies and voting records align with your own values.

“In the upcoming election,
all we need to do to make a change is to vote for the people that will help create it.
As a student and designer, change is a difficult task, but if we band together to fight for change, it will become reality.”

Takes 1 Vote

“Our idea was to copy the layout of a text message app so that it would grab the attention of the young vote and encourage them to show up and have their voices heard.”

Research your ballot!

Ballotpedia: Compare candidates and issues across parties and sample ballots—specific to your zip code.

League of Women Voters California: Provides information on how to vote, compares candidates and issues.

Best Colleges Student Voting Guide: This site examines major issues, especially as they affect students, comparing each party's stance.

“This is my first time voting, and I knew that I wanted to vote by issue instead of party. I literally wrote down a list of issues that matter to me, and then used resources like Ballotpedia and the candidate’s campaign sites to compare them to each other and to my beliefs.”

Mariah Trevino, Film 2022

In summary:

- Be engaged and stand up for what you believe.
- Think about what issues are important and vote for the change you want to see.
- Look up the candidates and see how their policies and voting records align with your own values.
- Be an informed voter and make your vote count.

Dear future me,

I VOTED.

You're welcome.
